HOW IS GIN MADE?

The basic process for making gin starts with extracting pure alcohol or ethanol from a base spirit. Then, the ethanol is redistilled with juniper berries and other botanicals.

The botanicals impart flavour into the alcohol, which is what gives gin its herbal, floral notes.

There are three main techniques that distillers use to infuse botanicals into ethanol.

Steeping

When using the steeping technique, the distiller mixes the ethanol and the botanicals together in a large metal container over a heat source known as a pot still. The botanicals then steep into the base spirit, much like tea. Depending on how strong the distiller wants the flavour of the gin to be, they may remove the botanicals after a short period of time or leave them to steep for up to 48 hours.

Vapor Infusion

This method utilises a modified still called a Carter-head. The Carter-head still has a basket that is suspended over the still. The basket is filled with botanicals and is suspended over the still, filled with the base spirit. As the spirit is heated, the ethanol vapors rise up and into the basket, allowing the botanicals to release their essential oils into the vapors. The vapors then reliquefy, now containing the essence of the botanicals.

Vacuum Distillation

This is also known as cold distillation. This technique utilises a low-pressure vacuum environment, which greatly reduces the boiling point of the ethanol. According to distillers, avoiding extreme heat allows the flavours from the botanicals to remain more intact. Some distillers combine steeping and vapor infusion methods and blend the products together to make a compound gin.

BOTANICALS

Although gin producers use ingredients nowadays, such as herbs and spices from every corner of the planet, there are some fundamental botanicals that have always been used in its production since the beginning. Here is a selection of the 10 botanicals mainly used in the production of this distillate and their organoleptic characteristics.

Juniper

The word gin is derived from juniper, whether the French Genievre or the Dutch Jenever. Junipers are grown around the world and have dozens of different varieties.

In ancient times, junipers were used as a spice and for medicinal purposes. Taste-wise, it's dominantly pine-flavoured and is responsible for the Christmas tree notes most commonly associated with gin.

Coriander

Coriander is the dried seed of the cilantro plant and originally hails from southern Europe, north Africa, and Southwest Asia. It has a complex taste that's a little spicy and citrusy, and nutty when crushed. It's an easy complement to the flavours of juniper.

Angelica

Gins commonly use the root of the angelica plant, but some use the flower and seed as well. It tastes earthy and medicinal. It's also found in herbal liqueurs, bitters and amaros such as Fernet and Chartreuse.

Lemon

Lemon is used throughout the culinary world to brighten food and drink. Gin cocktails often have a lemon twist as well, accentuating the citrus flavors. In gin, lemon notes come across primarily as zesty and sweet lemon peel.

Orange

As with lemon, orange peel is the most common part of the fruit used in gin production — and dried orange peel in particular. Depending on the type of orange used, the oils in the skin can provide bitter citrus or sweet and gentle notes.

Orris Root

Orris root comes from the iris flower and looks similar to ginger. It has a floral and sweet aroma that's common in perfume as well as gin. It also adds an earthy and woody flavour.

Cardamom

Cardamom is a spice that's difficult to describe other than it smells and tastes like cardamom. It's common in food from southern India and is related to ginger. Cardamom pods added to food and gin is bright green, have a somewhat numbing and medicinal taste, and are highly aromatic with a powerful flavour.

Liquorice

Liquorice root is originally from southern Europe and India and is sugary sweet that's similar to anise. The flavour in licorice used by gin producers is far from the candy taste and can give gin a more viscous texture.

Cassia Bark

The cassia tree is a relative of cinnamon and is originally from southern China. The bark is harvested and dried and strongly resembles the spicy hot bite of cinnamon and cinnamon-flavoured products. Cassia is, however, just a little sweeter than cinnamon with a licorice-like flavour.

Cinnamon

Obtained from the inner bark of several tree species from the genus Cinnamomum, this ingredient plays a complementary role in the sweeter notes in Gin by adding a fiery spicy tone.

STYLE OF GIN

Over the course of more than 3 centuries, the evolution of gin production techniques has led to the emergence of different styles. To date, it is possible to distinguish at least 10 of them, listed here to give you an idea of how ingredients, methods, and places have affected the birth of so many varieties.

Old Tom Gin

Takes its name from Chamberlain Thomas, who distilled this type of gin in his Hodge Distillery. His apprentice modified the production technique using Coffey's still, thus producing a 'Young Tom', different from Chamberlain's original Old Tom. Originally, it was obtained by infusing the typical botanicals of gin into neutral corn-based alcohol with a high alcoholic volume. It was then blended with a percentage of barley-based spirit, and everything was then redistilled in a pot still to preserve and balance the malt flavour of the barley must and the fragrances of the botanicals. Finally, it was aged in cask. A barrel most likely gave it the typical sweet and woody notes for the first time.

Dry Gin

Gin is a juniper-flavoured spirit made not via the redistillation of botanicals, but by simply adding approved natural flavouring substances to a neutral spirit of agricultural origin. The predominant flavour must be juniper, and the minimum bottled strength is 37.5% ABV. The name 'Dry Gin' refers to those gins with no more than 0.1 grams of sugar per litre.

Distilled Gin

Distilled gin is produced exclusively by redistilling ethanol of agricultural origin with an initial strength of 96% ABV in stills traditionally used for gin, in the presence of juniper berries and other natural botanicals, provided that the juniper taste is predominant.

London Dry Gin

"Obtained from double distillation, where the first is usually made with the Coffey still. The first distillation is done to obtain a high-proof neutral spirit from a fermented mash (or wash). The fermentable base for this spirit may be derived from grain, sugar beet, grape, potato, sugar cane, plain sugar, or any other material of agricultural origin. The highly concentrated spirit is then redistilled with juniper berries and other botanicals in a pot still. Most often, the botanicals are suspended in a 'gin basket' positioned within the head of the still, which allows the hot alcoholic vapours to extract flavouring components from the botanical charge.

Plymouth Gin

Produced by the only distillery in Plymouth, it is the first gin to have received an Appellation of Origin from the EU. It differs particularly in its sweeter and more aromatic notes due to the raw materials used, and is less strong-tasting than the usual London Dry, made in the same copper pot still since 1855.

Navy Strength and Overproof Gin

When Plymouth Gin was officially recognised as the British Royal Navy Gin, given its strength that far exceeded that of the classic London gins, it was called Navy Strength. Nowadays, this style of gin—as well as the new Overproof Gin—is also produced by other distilleries and is used to classify those products reaching at least 50% alcohol by volume.

New Western Dry Gin

Identifies the gins obtained from new producers who use other botanicals as the main raw materials and not only juniper, or who modify the production techniques. The focus on taste is therefore shifted to the typically supporting botanicals, which thus become the protagonists of this new style of gin. The taste and aroma are therefore more balanced than the classic London Dry, which has the predominant note of juniper.

Compound Gin

It is considered by many to be the lowest quality gin, as it is created by taking the alcohol and 'soaking' the juniper and other botanicals (or essences) in it. Often, this leaves the gin with a colouring. After letting the botanicals rest in the alcohol for a while, they are filtered, and compound gin is ready to be bottled. This category includes bathtub gin and all gin that is flavoured after distillation.

Sloe Gin

A gin-based liqueur obtained by infusing wild blackthorn berries (native to Devon, Dartmoor, and Cornwall) in high-proof gin for a few months. After these months of maceration, the result is sweetened with sugar and diluted with water before bottling. The result is a fairly sweet, fruity purple liqueur with slightly pungent notes of juniper.

Aged and Reserve Gin

Not a common practice, but back in the day, gin, like other spirits, was stored and shipped using barrels. The flavours would eventually change and develop unique colours and flavours. Very few producers now maintain this gin's original heritage.

Genever and Jenever

The original spirit produced in the Netherlands (now also made in Belgium, northern France, and Germany) is still produced in different styles. We differentiate two main categories: oude (old) and jonge (young). This is not a matter of ageing, but of distilling techniques.

People started using the term oude for the old-styled jenever, and jonge for the new style, which contains more grain instead of malt and can even contain plain sugar-based alcohol. Jenever is made by blending two distillates: neutral alcohol and maltwijn (malt wine), a malted grain distillate, which gives a malty flavour. The primary flavour is juniper, from which it's named, specifically its berries rich in ingredients that provide aroma and taste.

Two Moons Five Flower Tea 180

Region: Hong Kong

Flavour: Herbal, Juniper

Tasting notes: Strong chrysanthemum note, the sweetness of the frangipani and self-heal transition to the earthy scent and rich aroma of honey suckle and silk cotton.

Two Moons is Hong Kong’s first craft gin brand. The new five flower tea gin draws inspiration from a century-old herbal tea recipe. Crafted with special brewing techniques, it masterfully balances tradition and modernity.

This gin harmonizes the cooling and detoxifying properties of five flower tea with the comforting aromas and flavours of gin, offering a tribute to rich and unique cultural heritage from Hong Kong.

Recommended Cocktail:
Gin & Soda and Tuxedo

Recommended Tonic:
Fever Tree Mediterranean Tonic

Garnish:
Lemon Peel

Nikka Coffey Gin 210

Country: Japan

Flavour: Juniper, Citrus,
Botanical

Tasting notes: Smooth and vibrant gin with prominent Japanese citrus notes like yuzu and kabosu, balanced by juniper and subtle spices. It has a creamy, refreshing texture with a crisp, zesty finish.

This spirit begins with a blend of corn and barley that is mashed, fermented, and distilled in Nikka’s Coffey stills to create a neutral distillate. To this base, a selection of botanicals is added, offering a distinctive Japanese twist. These include four types of Japanese citrus — Yuzu, Kabosu, Amanatsu, and Shequasar — together with classic gin botanicals, for instance, juniper berries, angelica, coriander seeds, and lemon & orange peels.

Recommended Cocktail:
Dry Martini and White Lady

Recommended Tonic:
Fever Tree Indian Tonic

Garnish:
Lime Wheel

Peddlers Gin

130

Country: China

Flavour: Juniper, Spice, Citrus, Herbal

Tasting notes:

Powerful earthy and almond notes, with aromatic Asian mint and Buddha's Hand aroma and finish by citrus and Sichuan pepper.

Peddlers Gin begins with a carefully crafted blend of 11 botanicals sourced from across China, creating a unique and authentic flavor profile.

This gin is distinguished by its bold combination of juniper, aromatic Asian mint, and Buddha's Hand, balanced with earthy almond notes and a hint of Sichuan pepper. The result is a complex spirit that celebrates the rich heritage and diverse flavours of China.

Recommended Cocktail:

Martinez and Negroni

Recommended Tonic:

Fever Tree Light Indian Tonic

Garnish:

Akori Gin

150

Country: Spain

Flavour: Spice, Citrus, Fruity

Tasting notes: Fresh and exotic gin with bright citrus notes, hints of tropical dragon fruit, and a delicate balance of juniper and floral undertones. Its smooth and fruity profile makes it refreshing and light.

Akori Gin is crafted from a base of rice, juniper, and a carefully curated selection of botanicals inspired by Japanese traditions. It opens with a vibrant burst of citrus, followed by earthy notes of ginger root and subtle hints of apple. While some raw ethanol flavours may emerge, Akori Gin stands apart from other rice-based Japanese gins by offering a more balanced base spirit. Its delicate grain and sake-like qualities are present but not overpowering, resulting in a harmonious and smooth profile.

Recommended Cocktail:

White Negroni and Gin Sour

Catnip Gin Series No. 2 - Da Hong Pao

200

Country: Hong Kong

Flavour: Citrus, Spice, Fruity

Tasting notes: Features earthy and roasted oolong tea notes from Da Hong Pao, complemented by delicate floral, herbal, and juniper tones. Its rich, complex profile offers a smooth balance of tea-driven warmth and classic gin botanicals.

The Catnip Tea Gin Series is born from a passion for both tea and gin. In this second edition, The distillery has hand-selected the renowned Da Hong Pao oolong tea from the Wuyi Mountains in Fujian. With a history dating back to the 1300s, Da Hong Pao is considered one of the most prestigious cliff-grown teas in Wuyi.

This exceptional tea offers a unique orchid fragrance, a mineral and fruity palate, and delicate notes of caramel, vanilla, and stone fruits, finishing with a long-lasting, sweet aftertaste. To complement this exquisite tea. The distillery has carefully paired it with juniper berries, coriander seeds, and mandarin, creating a harmonious blend of elegant tea, bright fruits, and warm spices.
